BBC2's Surviving Sandy Hook tells the story of families coming to terms with Adam Lanza's murderous attack

Comments (0)

Documentary dealing with the aftermath of Adam Lanza's murderous attack on Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut in 2012.

Lanza murdered 20 children and six members of staff at the school, and many Americans believed the tragedy would finally change America's attitude to gun ownership and related gun violence.

Jezza Neumann's film follows three families involved in the shooting as they try to rebuild their lives after the horrific events.

One of those featured is Gilles Rousseau, whose daughter Lauren was a teacher at the school. She was murdered in the attack, but her father has found his campaign for minor gun law reform met with robust resistance from America's powerful gun lobby.

This is a deeply moving film about grief, hope, love and guns. Part of the award-winning This World strand.

What the film won't do is delve into the bizarre world of online conspiracy theorists who maintain Sandy Hook was a so-called 'false flag' operation, staged by 'the powers that be' for nefarious means.

That's unlikely, to say the least, and viewers this side of the pond will once again shake their heads in amazement and sorrow at the lunacy of America's gun culture.
